Our daughters' several dowers, that future strife May be prevented now. The princes, France and Burgundy, Great rivals in our youngest daughter's love, Long in our court have made their amorous sojourn, And here are to be answer'd. Tell me, my daughters,—Since now we will divest us both of rule, Interest of territory, cares of state,—

SCENE I. King Lear's palace.
According to Kahn, Lear's old age forces him to regress into an infantile disposition, and he now seeks a love that is traditionally satisfied by a mothering woman, but in the absence of a real mother, his daughters become the mother figures. Lear's contest of love between Goneril, Regan, and Cordelia serves as the binding agreement; his ...

Lear's privileging of Cordelia prevents him from forming the kind of relationship with his older daughters that might have resulted in genuine love. Scene 1 establishes a plot and subplot that will focus on a set of fathers and their relationships with their children.

Scene 1 - CliffsNotes
The aging King Lear decides to divide his kingdom among his three daughters, allotting each a portion in proportion to the eloquence of her declaration of love. The hypocritical Goneril and Regan make grand pronouncements and are rewarded; Cordelia, the youngest daughter, who truly loves Lear, refuses to make an insincere speech to prove her love and is disinherited.
